

BIOGRAPHY

Scott A. Srebnick, an honors graduate of Harvard Law School, has earned a reputation as a "lawyer's lawyer," to whom other lawyers often turn when a case seems especially complex or even hopeless. Since 1992, Mr. Srebnick has represented numerous professionals, including lawyers, bankers, and corporate executives charged with serious felony offenses in South Florida and across the United States. Mr. Srebnick's practice is devoted primarily to trials and appeals of white collar offenses, including fraud, money laundering, public corruption, and racketeering, although his practice also encompasses the representation of individuals in extradition hearings, civil forfeiture actions, and professional disciplinary proceedings.

Mr. Srebnick received his B.A. in Economics in 1987 from Amherst College, where he graduated magna cum laude and received the James R. Nelson prize for his senior thesis. After achieving the highest possible score (48) on the Law School Admission Test (LSAT), Mr. Srebnick attended Harvard Law, where he studied under now-Justice Stephen Breyer, Alan Dershowitz, Laurence Tribe, and other notable professors. Mr. Srebnick launched his practice in 1992, winning a new trial for a former high school classmate who had been convicted of narcotics offenses in federal court in Philadelphia.

In 2006 through 2009, Mr. Srebnick was recognized by Super Lawyers Magazine as one of the top 100 lawyers in the State of Florida in all combined categories, based on a vote of his peers. Since 2004, he has been named annually by Florida Trends magazine as one of Florida's Legal Elite, and he is listed in Best Lawyers in America for 2008. Chambers USA (2007) describes Mr. Srebnick as "a fantastic appellate lawyer, completely familiar with the nuances of criminal appeals and thoroughly dedicated to his clients." Chambers USA notes that Mr. Srebnick "has built a national practice consisting of criminal trials and appellate cases." It praises Mr. Srebnick's ability to "stand up to much larger teams of lawyers and come out head and shoulders above in terms of research, writing, and presentation." "Commentators agree that his 'gracious, smooth style and clear arguments' are the sources of his success." For the past 8 years, Mr. Srebnick has received the highest rating (AV) by the Martindale-Hubbell lawyers listing service.
